

Humility begets reverence begets thankfulness begets worship ...

Humility in the workplace ...
Humility in the workplace translates to worship in the worship place. Intimacy with God is built into the everyday motion and fabric of life, not the extraordinary circumstances that we so often pine for. We sometimes reflect the mentality of many of the first century followers of Christ, seeking miracles while Jesus offers life.

Humility brings us to ...
Humility brings us to reverence brings us to thankfulness brings us to worship.

Absorbing life ...
We don't understand that it is usually not what is happening in and around us but how we absorb life. That is why a thankful spirit is so necessary to a right walk with God. When we have a thankful spirit we just tend to suck in life by the bucket full.

A thankful heart ...
A thankful heart knows who gave us the job to provide for our family. We realize that God has provided our employment as his means of taking care of our needs. Grumbling and complaining cause us to forget the loving connection between God and our daily well-being.

Supper from our Father ...
We don't merely sit down to eat lunch or supper, but being in thankful, super-absorption mode of God's amazing goodness, we realize that our meal has been prepared for us by our Lord and Master and delivered right to our table.

Hot water from our Lord ...
We push the handle of the faucet forward and to the left for clear, clean hot water and to the right for wonderful, safe cold water. And we thank God. We know who provided this bounty.
